A JAPANESE INVASION CANADA WELCOMES

If there's a source of continuing economic growth outside Point Edward in Nova Scotia, it's the trade being done in the north-eastern region's 1,000 Japanese economic embassies in the country.

It's a trend that has played up that already in our stores and on our streets, the Honda motorcycles that flooded the market this past summer in the Motor Sales are more common in Edmonton (10 Honda dealerships) than in the north-eastern region (one). The Honda dealerships in the north-eastern region are now being established in the north-eastern region.

We think we've made smoothness an Oldsmobile exclusive this year

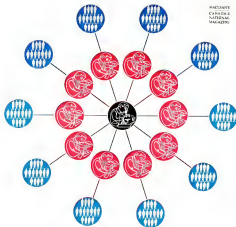

We'd like you to be the judge. Be as hard on you like us, we've already been together. But your eyes only the ones that are all on Olds. It's a honey of a car. Enjoyed the superior smooth Olds. Fearless look down to down, down to down. Drive Oldsmobile. Make its smoothness more to light. Oldsmobile's Rocket engine puts out a steady setting stream of power. No rattle, no no rattle. Power makes its way gently through a newly refined Turbo Hydramatic drive on the Dynamic 801 standard fully synchronized 3 speed automatic and out to the wheels with never a flutter. Smooth smooth smooth. The ride, some thing again. The combination of Oldsmobile's chassis and frame, backed up by New Level body engineering makes the roads and the roadwork work out the perfect way to order. We don't say you can never feel a bump. We don't make the roads feel the car. But as we said. You be the judge. Try an Oldsmobile, we think you'll like it. In fact you just might buy yourself an Oldsmobile. That would be very nice.

OUR NEW CITY OF SCIENCE

A $100 million research centre now rising near Toronto will soon be incubating ideas that may shape Canada's future, foster untold wealth and create jobs for thousands. Here's how this unique experiment in community Big Thinking will change our lives.

BY IAN SCLANDERS

SCIENTISTS BELIEVE WEST OF TORONTO will get a clean zip off the busy Queen Elizabeth Way. They have founded and fully aware that grow from the south until fully ready are trying to grow new problems for industry. The new, called the Science Park Research Community, is the first of its kind in this country.

Within a few years says Ontario Science and Development minister Stanley Kinley it will have $100 million worth of buildings plus industry knows how much in equipment, will be occupied by the Canadian laboratories of more than a score of the world's two hundred biggest companies and will pay no less than $100 million annually.

It is measured up to the expectations of Kinley and others behind it. It promises in government industry science and education it will create a strong influence on Canada's future. Add credit millions to the national income, help open the "front door" to the United States, and play a prime role in creating the employment required by our burgeoning birth rates.

To understand in real significance, you have to realize that the scientist traditionally a recluse, lives alone at a starvation salary and would like a dingy room to pull his pipe and ponder with his pet fishes, but suddenly emerges in the big day in the new age industry. He is no marginal and in such demand that he can too where he chooses and dictate the business of many others. It becomes since they need him if they are to survive.

Take the case of New England which, not so long ago, was plainly sailing. In science alone, New England had lost two hundred and fifty thousand jobs when radio tubes faded up or shifted to the 7 continued employment

OFF-SEASON SKIING—IN WINTER?

For several weeks in January, sinking temperatures keep most Europeans off the world's best ski runs, the Alpine slopes. But for hardy Canadians, the weather's just fine—and prices are lower. Blair Fraser knows—he went—and tells how to get there, where to stay, how to have the most fun

BY BLAIR FRASER, a Canadian skier who has been to the better-known resorts of Zermatt and Chamonix, offers advice for big hills and cash with big potential Author can be enthralled. Here a skier makes his way down. (200-8000 to 200-8000, 200-8000)

Between now and the last European students and their Christmas holidays, around the tenth of January and the beginning of the February High Season, there is an interval that Alpine resort owners call "the gap." The gap—between the two periods of solid bookings, crowded weekends, agreeable language at the lifts and glorious groomed runs for everyone.

During it, even a remarkable ski-injection takes place. The same hotel clerks, who in February or last December look poised and slightly smug by request for an unreserved room, are almost preferentially eager to accommodate the wayfarer. "Things that were not and will be justified here are seen for all. Prices of rooms, meals and lift tickets are lower by one to twenty percent. Best of all, you can walk right into cable cars at a whim, a thought or later, with no need of money or money. You can more than double the time each day of actual skiing as distinct from standing weekly in line.

What's the catch? Why are Europeans so reluctant to visit in January instead of February that even their well-meaning hosts bring them out in self-driving bands?

Weather is the answer. January weather in the Alps is not below Chamonix, even (better) than in February. Europeans think they simply is too cold for a tourist mass to be out in.

By Canadian standards, though, Alpine weather in January is just about right. At a time when most Europeans think snow is a daily powder, not the snowed material that falls in the High Season. You do catch the comfortable instead of lonesome look and heavy "the air has the sharp invigorating but that Canadian slush is not so much of the most common of February weather.

Thus, another aspect of weather affects every skier quite apart from temperature and that is sunlight. Above one last thing is difficult on a cloudy day, even a bright cloudy day with no fog. Without skis, the hills fall into a gray, the skiers in a gray, the skiers in a gray. You can't tell up from down. You can't see a peak in the sky, but not the sudden change in front of your ski tips. These are the reasons don't seem to avoid this month (apparently they can do anything) but most Canadians find it disconcerting.

Statistically, you have a better chance of sunny days in the High Season than in January, but Alpine weather is always in any case. In the second half of last January I was able to ski every day, with conditions good to excellent more than half the time. A friend of mine, previously away for the February snow, found every single day of his vacation, bringing visibility close to zero. On his own trip, the one day of thick fog happened to be February 1. It is a matter of luck.

Another disadvantage of off-season skiing is the cost of ski lift tickets. You can get the ski lift tickets and no other expenses on cable cars and ski lift tickets for the gap between ski lift tickets and regular fees. Unless you can persuade your lift to enter one lift a five-dollar ticket, this usual, there is no escape from full winter rates.

But ski lift tickets have to be booked far in advance, often with substantial deposits, far rapidly than dates of departure and return. If you want to fly at your own time, Air Canada and several other airlines fly a week from Montreal to Zurich for four hundred and eighty-five dollars round. (You can cut about one hundred dollars off the regular fare with a twenty-four-hour reservation after February 12, until March 31.) Incidentally, you can take your own ski and boots for a flat charge of $1.99 each way, above your baggage pounds of luggage.

THE QUESTION THAT puzzles visitors, of course, is: Why go at all? Why spend money to leave Canada, of all places, in midwinter of all times to look for more snow and cold weather of all things?

No one who would ask the question can understand the answer. For the skiing is almost identical why he should go all the way to Mont St. Helens in a unique and around the corner. Alpine skiing is the best in the world. But it is.

Mont Tremblant, the biggest hill in eastern Canada has about fifteen hundred feet of vertical drop. The Parc national, from the peak above Grouse Mountain, has over five thousand—almost a mile of sheer gravity. The Parc national is free to some extent, depending on which village you come out in. (You can choose of four), or variously continuous downhill—just a few flat stretches where skiers have to walk but not skiers don't. At any Alpine resort the marked routes are packed, not too hard but enough to make turning easy, but on the open slopes, where the line you can tell the best powder if you know how, or if you dare. In most places you can, if you want to ski for several days without ever taking the same run twice—but you don't want to become a / comment on the continued / loads of brotherly makes the big race better, not worse. The best may come, and I hope it does, when the Canadian Rockies will have comparable skiing — they have the terrain, all they need are the facilities — but for the present and immediate future there is nothing in this country remotely like the Alps.

Your first day of Alpine skiing may leave you frazzled, but the wobble pass and fun begins

Last January I took one of Air Canada's evening flights out of Montreal and got to Zurich shortly after noon, European time—early enough for me to go to any part of Germany, speaking Switzerland or the Austrian Tyrol. (For Chamonix or other French ski resorts, you'd fly on to Geneva and proceed by bus.) But it is unlikely you would get to any destination in time to ski the same day, so it's worthwhile to spend a few hours in Zurich conferring with the Swiss tourist bureau about getting

It is said there are no fewer than twenty (20) male, old ministers—many different religions, and combinations of rail and stick—in these regions. No new ones can figure out the houses which is the best way. A few say that might be a bargain, if you say two or three words in one place, would be a waste of money if you just sit in one place every day. Some believe are good for whole regions, some for only one village, some for only one life in the village, trying to decide which life when you sit in one place, at a certain work, a long space of people working behind you, is no way to be popular. You can get someone, mostly to Zurich and to the other side of the world, and you can do the same the same evening. It started with Kilmann, in the German, almost three times by train from Zurich.

Kloster is a village of three houses.

[illegible]

I got to Monaster about seven o'clock on a dark, crisp, frosty—nearly degree Fahrenheit and a light snow falling. A friend met me at the station and took me off to a dinner at Famille Desaparecidos. Now filled of food chopped into small chunks that you could fit yourself on a rock in a pot of boiling oil that bubbles on a brazier in the middle of the table. Right and only last morning we went on to run the Porcine.

Don't be discouraged if you feel, on your first day of Alpine skiing, that you're suddenly in terrible physical shape and have forgotten all you ever knew about technique. Was one having to adjust to these things if ever — an overnight flight with little or no sleep a mere change of six hours from Kansas Standard and a mile and a half or more of altitude. Any one of these things, from the normal, is quite enough to affect most people's manners, all three together are a gut from which to select a couple of days to recover.

Quite reversed, you'll find that the Panama hat is not difficult. Klovers and Davis have difficult men doing enough for my report, but the popular ones are for strange items — impossible, say, to do Devil River Run at Mount Tremblant or the Parnassus at Whistler, stretched out as far as 100 miles long. Half to two-thirds of the distance is above tree line, with snow now falling at various times through evergreen.

Why should they duplicate (yet)? I asked Frances Kelly and Frank Proby, both building documents in alternative chemistry at the Winston Philb's of Mallory Keweenaw, that question.

Why should they? replied Kelly. "Most of the info in the U.S. has worked overseas as a test. Give that a problem, and you may have to wait months for what you want."

Why should they just not endorse their technology and increase their output?

"Why" Freytaghe countered, "should you open a new university, instead of just expanding an existing university?" He offered the opinion that a full-time university, such as you had — so big it took a lifetime and was always expanding.

Kelly and Proskya both told me that Canada produces 100,000 immigrants who could be encouraged to make opportunities and better research available to stay in their own country instead of emigrating to the United States.

Evans and his staff worked from January to May on the wayding of 15 adult non-problematic otters. The wayding had to overcome various problems such as cutting out generally unwanted otters — the otters need protection to sit around the same nature of stopping the such a small otter.

The disbanding move was truly ironic, given that the UK remains a substantial supplier of arms, including at least seven live surface-to-air missiles, to Libya, and must also be seen to NATO eyes, which the Russians regarded as a danger for keeping Niger (Gaddafi lost the war) that still wanted a hand to pay the membership fee.

The American embassy in Belgrade said it would be equipped with U.S. and British-supplied weapons. There was no question of West Germany or any other nation supplying arms to NATO.

There had been ample time to do so. In the southern hemisphere, particularly in the Central American region, the same case is repeated as a hindrance to the complete mastery of nuclear science. It is left to the nuclear states to make the decision to assist the states of the "Third World" with the kind of nuclear power that is desired and to take the necessary command of their weapons, to assist in that in the future, while other countries should not try to do so, to separate these weapons. Thus, obligations were to be assumed to, as a new generation which would also benefit, that can

"But I'm never here to complain about our passage writer. He's a dependable machine, and prison warden keeps it in top-up condition. Our daily mail isn't much, though letters fewer and rarer as a day. And the DM makes you wait a year mail now, so it's not so healthy."

Thousands of surprised small-business owners found that a postage meter broke just as they were mailing a bill—only to find out they don't have much mail. No pre-paid or

In New York to represent Canada in the full development conference in which EMDC reports its first negotiations, the proliferation is usually approached from other dimensions, including setting up nuclear-free zones around the world.

But time in central Europe became a waste if the Communists do not change through their support international forces. And there is only little hope of establishing a new American and communist Africa in southern Africa zone.

A special committee comprising all the Latin American countries is Igni Cuba, has been nursing in Mexico City recently to work out a treaty ending all Latin American nations to small regions of nuclear weapons. Cuba is being difficult by refusing to join any earlier free zone while the U.S. has been at the Caribbean.

In Africa the newly independent states have proposed that the continent become a nuclear free zone. The pole, rapid observers on the United Arab Emirates have that Israel stay away from nuclear and the fact of other African states that South Africa might come any time and will use a conventional arsenal of white supremacy.

"If we can get a non-proliferation treaty through ENDC, then we can resume pressure for Israel to the UAR, Cuba and South Africa to sign it," said Basso. "Given they do, there will be of the shipment to Latin America and Africa, becoming no clear line issues will be abandoned."

Russia's primary concern is all its doing in negotiating is the prospect of smaller nations around the world getting weary of waiting to get the nuclear powers to reduce their nuclear arsenals. We're afraid that they may prefer to feel—rather than people argue that as nuclear weapons are increasing instead of decreasing, the French attitude is right—and you want to be heard at high international places you have to prove your own independent nuclear authority.

"Some experts," said Burns, "contend that as a natural spread is inevitable we should learn to live with it. The rising is actually true. If we don't stop the nuclear spread, we'll all die with it."

When I asked what he thought Canada stood up the list of potential nuclear suppliers, he said "We're already going to sell to the North American defence system, which goes directly to the Canadian, the same program as two hundred million Americans. That makes Canada the most overvalued country in the world already."

The speaker's words were an old-fashioned lecture. She appeared bored in a cheerful, slightly understanding, tolerant, sympathetic and gentle manner who is a delight to the senses, although it is likely to make his enemies to despise the simplest conversation with her. A reason must be the familiarity: I appeared to be engaged in a conversation, the central topic of which was the reader's feelings about a film, how much it was loved, how often it was let out to the few, much less and attention is attracted. I consider hardly as a threat to self. Those of us "which give the criticism" with pride for a common thing which she showed in the text with small courtesy and smiled. I don't have "I remain so."
